First impressions, I love the initial landing page—I'm immediately drawn in by the aesthetic and caption under Christie's image. I think all the information and pictures are appropriately used on each page and work together as a whole. I also think the menu has improved since the mockup. I do have a few things I've noticed throughout:

1. It appears that the menu intersects with the title and content on the page when the window starts to shrink. It'd be great if the menu could act as its own block where it doesn't overlap with these other elements.
2. When you open the menu, there's a lot of movement with the menu items growing, and the content on the page shrinking. Is there a way where at least the menu items stay in one place and don't respond to the width of the menu (especially since there's only one width the menu opens up to)?
3. Image captions would be useful in contextualizing the images with the content.
4. This is nit-picky but italicize book titles and newspapers.
5. The "Most Famous Works" page is super cool, but I think I'd prefer if the descriptions of the books were cut down to just the first paragraph so they don't bleed onto the other book covers. If it's not too much trouble, it'd also be ok to make the book covers bigger to give them more room for the text.

Again, thank you so much, I really like what you have so far! I'm excited for the final product!
